Overview

When you plan a new type of teaching like lessons in a blended form, it is useful and recommended to review your way of teaching and check if it is fit for the approach. There is a lot to think about! We created a checklist to help.

Is your lesson fit for Blended Learning? A Checklist

- ◯ I reflect on my own teaching style and methods and I am willing to adapt it to blended learning approaches.

- ◯ I am able to check my contents for suitability for online learning with regards to content, methods, and target group.

- ◯ I am up to date with regards to my teaching subject, I am able to work with new technologies and I am aware of the state-of-the-art methodologies of teaching.

- ◯ I know that it is important to check my teaching contents for topicality regularly and add new content that I find suitable.

- ◯ I know my target group(s) well and my learning content is adapted to their life reality.

- ◯ I can handle different access opportunities of my learners to hardware required for my e-learning sessions.

- ◯ I am aware of the fact that my learners have different levels of skills in the use of technology and I know how to handle this.

- ◯ I am aware of data protection issues and know how to act accordingly in my courses.

- ◯ I am aware of the meaning of OER licenses, I am able to search for OER material that I can use in my courses and I know how to label my own contents adequately.
